The following Research Works cover the findings of research and development work carried out by SPRU with local authority partners in 1998-2000.

   An overview of the five research and development projects in which attempts were made to translate outcomes ideas, derived from prior research with stakeholders, into tools and procedures which would be useful in practice.

   A project which aimed to support care management in summarising and recording intended outcomes for older people as part of assessment.

   The development and use of a form designed to brief front-line home care providers about intended outcomes, user preferences and required actions.

   The use of an outcome focus, and research-based structured tools to improve practice and recording during assessment and review with carers.

   (also referred to as : Evaluating the outcomes of social care using postal questionnaires)
A project in which stakeholders jointly developed a feedback survey of users of equipment and adaptations, including questions about outcomes.

The implementation of a programme of "customer visits" to enable senior managers to see first hand the outcomes of services and directly discuss them with service users.
