INTRODUCTION

Prior to the 1830s, tithes had been a traditional payment to the Church of a tenth of a person's produce that came from, or was nourished by the earth. Tithes were paid in kind, and thus made the system difficult to manage and the tithes themselves hard to collect. As British agriculture entered, in the early nineteenth century, a period of innovation and progress, the tithe system was increasingly regarded as not only cumbersome, but as an obstacle to improvement. In this climate of change, with a general impetus for reform, the Church of England too was put under pressure to renovate its administration. This, and the fact that in the 1830s the British agricultural community was suffering from economic and agrarian depression, all combined to strengthen the demand and support for a reformation of the existing tithe system.

The Whigs were committed to introducing compulsory commutation, but due to the complexity of the tithe issue, progress was slow and three unsuccessful commutation Bills preceded the Commutation Act of 1836.

The Tithe Commutation Act of 1836 (6 & 7 William IV cap. 71) commuted tithes to a fluctuating money payment. This payment was based upon an average of the actual value of tithes paid in each parish or township over the previous five years. This sum was then apportioned among the properties of each district according to the land use of each field or farm. The Bill itself avoided precise statements about tithe value, allowing assistant commissioners to exercise a greater degree of flexibility in concord with varying local conditions.

Provision was made for both voluntary and compulsory tithe commutation. Owners of more than a quarter of the lands or tithes of the parish could, as with enclosures, convene a parochial meeting to discuss commutation. Here, any sum in lieu of tithes agreed by two thirds of both great and small tithe owners was binding upon the rest of the parish. Once the voluntary agreement was confirmed by the bishop of the diocese, a valuer was appointed, at the expense of the landowners, to apportion the agreed rent-charge on each plot of land. In 1838, voluntary agreements were not stopped as had been originally planned, due to their popularity and the fact that they were quicker, easier, and cheaper to manage.

Compulsory commutations began after 1 October 1838. They were enacted by commissioners and assistant commissioners, who assessed and apportioned tithe values and then converted them into rent-charge payments.

The 1836 Act created three tithe commissioners; these were based in London and were appointed by the Crown and the Archbishop of Canterbury. They had the power to confirm voluntary agreements on tithes, frame compulsory agreements, and appoint a secretariat and the assistant commissioners. Assistant commissioners were the officials who went to all the tithe districts and offered advice, settled disputes, confirmed agreements, and effected compulsory commutation.

In apportioning the tithe rent-charge, a map of the tithe district was produced and a schedule compiled detailing information relevant to calculating the charge. The apportionment itself can be divided into four sections. The first is the preamble. This provides a statement of articles of agreement for commutation; listing the names of commissioners, tithe owners, customary payments in lieu of tithes, and stating the date of the apportionment's confirmation, the extent and use of the acreage liable to tithe, the totals of rent-charge awarded and the standard table for conversion to rent-charge.

The subsequent and most important section is the schedule of apportionment. Here, all the landowners, tenants and fields in the tithe district are listed. Each tithe area, (usually a field), is numbered and its state of cultivation given, as well as its statute acreage in acres, roods and perches. Also detailed is the value of the rent-charge apportioned to it. The third section is a summary of the above schedule, in which the landowners are all listed and the total amount of rent-charge apportioned is stated. The fourth and final part contains altered apportionments.

Altered apportionments were made after the original award was confirmed. They reflected changes in ownership and land subdivision and recorded major alterations in the size, shape and status of the original tithe areas. Altered apportionments were also drawn up if tithe maps were found to be inaccurate. When such changes in land and landholding affected a significant part of the parish, a new separate apportionment was made. On the list, these individual new apportionments are under the title 'altered app.'

The Tithe Act of 1842 (5 & 6 Victoria cap. 54) permitted incumbents to exchange glebe land for other land in their parishes, with the consent of the diocesan bishop and of the patron of the living, and awards of exchange of glebe survive from 1843 onwards.

Rent-charges could be redeemed where the whole rent charge for the parish did not exceed £15 a year, where the rent-charge was divisible into very small sums, and where it had been wrongly charged on lands not within the parish. In 1925 when new rent-charge levels were fixed, provision was made for voluntary redemption of rent-charges by means of repaying annual instalments over a sixty year period. In 1936, with the Tithe Act of that year, the capital value of all remaining rent charges had to be redeemed, and, consequently, rent-charge finally disappeared. The redemption certificates affirming the transaction are under the title 'redemp.certs'.

Tithe maps and apportionments were made in triplicate. One copy, usually the working plan of the assistant commissioner, was kept by the Tithe Office, another was held by the parish clerk, and another retained by the bishop of the diocese. The Tithe Office copies are now held by the Public Record Office. The Borthwick Institute currently holds many of the maps and awards deposited originally with the Diocesan Registrar. These awards and plans are those bearing the reference [TA]. The tithe records issued to the parochial incumbents are a much more fragmentary collection, yet complement well the diocesan copies. These parochial copies have the reference [PR].

The following list gives, in alphabetical order, an index by name of the tithe district, (which was normally the parish or township within the parish). By each district are detailed the relevant tithe records, (awards, maps, altered apportionments, redemption certificates and awards of exchange), and their reference numbers in square brackets. With maps accompanying awards, if they exist, the name of the cartographer is given in rounded brackets, along with the map's date, if different from that of the award. Redemption certificates and altered apportionments are not listed individually by date, for particular details of these certificates and apportionments refer to the tithe record card index situated in the searchroom office. The date given for the original award is its date of confirmation. Often two references are given for awards; these, as explained above, represent the diocesan [TA] and parochial [PR] copies of the award. The same applies to the redemption certificates and altered apportionments, both parish and diocese copies existing in some cases. However, although mostly incomplete, the parish certificates can and do complement the diocesan collection and, although largely similar, these copies should not be discounted as simply duplicates of the diocesan copies -in many cases parish copies exist where others do not.

A further list also exists that indexes the cartographers alphabetically by surname. Following their name, all the parishes or tithe districts for whom they drew maps are listed. To ascertain the reference numbers and further details of these maps, the main tithe list that follows should be consulted.
