MEDIEVAL CARTULARIES OF GREAT BRITAIN: AMENDMENTS AND ADDITIONS TO THE SCOTTISH SECTION OF DAVIS

Introduction

This is a companion piece to, and its publication was inspired by, Philippa Hoskin’s article in Monastic Research Bulletin 2 (1996). It is not the product of extensive research, rather of more complete listing of collections in the National Library of Scotland, especially the Advocates’ MSS., of references found in the course of cataloguing and of general serendipity. The material was originally noted in the margins of a copy of Davis’s Medieval Cartularies by members past and present of the NLS Department of Manuscripts, especially Elspeth Yeo, Julian Russell and myself.

There is some information about original cartularies, but more about later copies of them: more of interest therefore for the history of scholarship than for strictly medieval studies.

For the sake of completeness I have repeated the anonymous additions published in the Scottish Historical Review 38 (1959), pp. 172-4 and those by John Durkan in Innes Review 22 (1971), p. 110.

MEDIEVAL CARTULARIES: ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS

Nicholas Vincent

(With the assistance of Nigel Ramsay,
M. G. and the late C. R. Cheney)

Following the publication by Philippa Hoskin in the preceding volume of this bulletin of a series of additions and corrections to G.R.C. Davis’ catalogue of Medieval Cartularies of Great Britain (London 1958), I have endeavoured here to list the more significant additions and corrections known to me, beyond those already signalled by Hoskin, in the hope that one day a second edition of Davis’ magnificent catalogue can be prepared. For the publication of cartularies since 1958, attention should also be drawn to a wide-ranging article by Jean-Philippe Genet, ‘Cartulaires anglais du Moyen-Age’, in Les Cartulaires, ed O. Guyotjeannin, L. Morelle and M. Parisse (Paris 1993) pp. 343-61, esp. pp. 357-9, which includes an extensive bibliography. My own lists have been supplemented with the assistance of Nigel Ramsay (who supplied various details, especially of mss. passing through the sale rooms), and through collating my own list of additions with that of Mrs Mary and the late Professor Christopher Cheney. The Cheneys in particular drew my attention to various items from Hamper’s Life of Dugdale, the Duke of Kingston’s Library destroyed in 1745 and to the two additional cartularies for the see of Worcester listed below. The remaining items came to light during my own searches for English Episcopal Acta, and more recently for the charters of Henry II, both projects sponsored by the British Academy, with, in the case of Henry II, further financial assistance from the Leverhulme Trust and from the Newton Fund of Trinity College Cambridge. I have also enclosed details below of various significant deposits of medieval charters in provincial archives, where the muniments of a particular house survive almost in their entirety. This is done in the hope that any future edition of Davis will extend its scope beyond cartularies proper, to include the more important deposits of original charters and antiquaries’ transcripts. In England, given the wholesale destruction of medieval charters after the Reformation, we are accustomed to approach monastic archives via the cartularies. A glance across the Channel, to the French local archives, should teach us that in many cases, even despite the absence of a cartulary, a monastery’s archive can survive, almost complete, in the form of original charters. This is especially true, in England of the various alien priories whose archives were transferred en masse, even before the Reformation, to the collegiate establishments of Oxford, Cambridge, Eton and Winchester. For future reference, it is amongst the collections of the Bodleian and especially the British Library that searchers are likely to unearth large numbers of further additions, of enrolled copies or antiquaries’ transcripts from lost cartularies. As shown by the transcript of the lost portions of the Athelney cartulary, recently rediscovered by Simon Keynes, or by the items for Kingswood and Markyate from the Hale mss. in Lincoln’s Inn, listed below, the early antiquaries provide a rich, and often neglected source for new discoveries.

[Editor’s note: Since the publication of Dr Hoskin’s supplementary list in last year’s Bulletin, others have provided additional information on specific cartularies. This information has been inserted at the appropriate point in this present list. Thanks are due to Mr Michael Collinson, Dr D. Cox, Dr Rosemary Hayes, Professor Michael Hicks, and Dr Nigel Tringham.)

THE MONASTIC SITES OF (i) THE BRITISH PROVINCE OF THE ORDER OF CLUNY AND (ii) AUGUSTINIAN FRIARS IN BRITAIN AND IRELAND

I have a general interest in monastic sites of both monks and friars and their development from the twelfth to the fifteenth centuries. However, I have a particular interest in the sites of (i) the British Province of the Order of Cluny, and (ii) of the Augustinian Friars in England, Wales and Ireland.

(i) Last year I completed a doctoral thesis on the Cluniac abbey of Paisley in Renfrewshire, Scotland. As an architectural historian my main interest was in its architecture and its archaeology, which had to be seen in the context of its history, which I researched from its foundation in 1163 to the present day. From my study of other Cluniac houses in Britain, which I used as comparisons with Paisley, I intend looking more closely at the (extant) British Cluniac sites to discover (a) whether there is any definite similarities in their layouts, and (b) whether Cluny had any direct influence on the layout of those houses which followed the Cluniac observation but which remained independent Benedictine houses.

(ii) My interest in the architectural history of the sites of the Augustinian Friars in England, Wales and Ireland is a personal one. However, it is in Ireland where most of the evidence is extant, and I am therefore interested in discovering what, if any, similarities existed between the Augustinian houses of the English Province and their counterparts in the Irish Province.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION ON HISTORICAL MANUSCRIPTS’ PROJECT ON THE RECORDS OF MEDIEVAL RELIGIOUS HOUSES
a project to enhance the coverage of religious houses in the indexes to the National Register of Archives

The Historical Manuscripts Commission (HMC) is perhaps best known to medievalists for its magnificent series of published Reports and Calendars, which commenced in 1870 and is now drawing to a close. Those of us who work for the HMC sometimes suspect that fewer medievalists are aware of the National Register of Archives (NRA) which it has maintained since 1945.

The NRA now holds more than 40,000 catalogues of record deposits located throughout the country in national, local and specialist repositories and in private possession. The only records which our remit specifically excludes are the ‘Public Records’, which are the concern of the PRO. The catalogues range in detail from the one-page summary to multi-volume calendars. Three paper indexes to these ‘reports’ were maintained. These were the ‘Personal’, ‘Business’ and ‘Subject’ indexes. The ‘Subject’ index has since been renamed the ‘Organisations’ index to reflect the fact that it has always recorded the institution or body which created a group of records and has never attempted the more complicated task of thematic indexing. Since 1987 these indexes have been computerised and, in 1995, to coincide with the NRA’s fiftieth anniversary, they were mounted on the Internet.

The old paper index included c. 300 slips relating to the archives of some 200 pre-reformation houses. In 1994, I was asked to devise identifying codes for this section of the index and mount the information held onto the computerised Organisations Index. All organisations are assigned a code relating to their type and most also have a sub-code. Thus, ‘pre-reformation institutions’ were assigned the code 8 with the following sub-codes: 1: Augustinian canons; 2: Benedictine monks; 3: Cistercian monks; 4: Cluniac monks; 5: Premonstratensian canons; 6: Other monastic orders; 7: Friars; 8: Military orders; 9: Nuns; 10: Collegiate churches. In order to distinguish between orders in the catch-all sub-codes (6, 7, 8, 9), for these entries, the order of the house is now placed in the index heading. Thus Bury St Edmunds Abbey is simply listed as such and coded as 8:2: Benedictine monks; but Shaftesbury Abbey is coded as 8:9: Nuns, but listed as ‘Shaftesbury Abbey (Benedictine)’.

Index entries relate not to individual documents, but to each identifiable archival deposit containing relevant documents. Thus R.M. Thomson’s 1334 entries in his Archives of the Abbey of Bury St Edmunds (Suffolk Records Society, 1980) have been reduced to 64 entries to which another 3 items, which Thomson did not identify, have been added. Each entry is not, therefore, an end in itself, but rather a pointer to where the researcher might look for further detail.

NRA indexing rules have always stated that deposits containing only deeds should not be indexed. Thus, the old paper index to religious houses contained cartularies, registers, accounts, rentals etc. but no deeds. It seemed to me that it was unacceptable to apply this rule to religious houses, especially when the smaller houses may only have left deeds. I have, therefore, developed a rule ofthumb that when there is a group of half-a-dozen or so deeds relating to a particular house these should be indexed. Indeed, there are occasions when even a single deed has been indexed if it was of sufficient importance, for example a foundation charter. This still means that small groups and single items will be missed but, in attempting to give a fairly blanket coverage, it is not possible to include all the minutiae.

Additions to this index have, so far, only been made as time allowed. At present (July 1997), the index entries stand as follows: 1: Augustinian canons: 87; 2: Benedictine monks: 87; 3: Cistercian monks: 48; 4: Cluniac monks: 20; 5: Premonstratensian canons: 19; 6: Other monastic orders: 10; 7: Friars: 11; 8: Military orders: 20; 9: Nuns: 39; 10: Collegiate churches: 25. However, although some 366 institutions (of a total of c. 1900 recorded by Knowles and Hadcock and Easson in Medieval Religious Houses) have an entry of some kind, few of them can be said to be complete in any way. This is largely because of the ad hoc way in which they have been added. However, for the first time, a substantial proportion of my time has been allocated to this task. It is hoped, therefore, that more concerted progress will be made between now and April 1998.

As the Reports and Calendars have never been systematically trawled for the NRA indexes, the first, major, step will be to extract information from them, update it from subsequent reports held in the NRA and load it onto the indexes. Next, some 200 or so NRA reports have been identified as holding relevant material and they will be examined accordingly. It is also planned to produce an NRA Information Sheet on finding the records of religious houses. This should, at least, give our researchers access to information which is held by the NRA but not yet easily found. It may well be all that the present time allocation will allow. However, if it were possible to extend the project, the next steps would be to load information from published general and specialised guides; to conduct a wider trawl through NRA reports thought likely to contain relevant material; and to conduct a systematic examination of published repository guides. All this work would be useful preparation for more targeted research on particular groups of houses or particular repositories.

In the meantime, if colleagues would like access to the information already held by the NRA, they are welcome to visit our public searchroom, open Monday to Friday 9.30 to 17.00. Those with access to the Internet may like to visit our web pages at <http://www.hmc.gov.uk>. From there you can gain access to the NRA indexes. Once into the indexes you can either search on 'Easy access methods', by the name of the institution you are researching, or on 'More complex searches', by code and other qualifiers if required.

It is probably worth reminding colleagues of another very useful research tool maintained by the HMC. This is the Manorial Documents Register (MDR) which records the whereabouts of all known surviving manorial documents for England and Wales. So far, only the Welsh counties (in association with the National Library of Wales) and Yorkshire (in association with the Borthwick Institute) have been computerised. For other counties, you will need to use the hard copy held at HMC. The MDR is not indexed by lord, past or present, but if you know the names of manors held by the religious houses you are interested in, it is an excellent starting point for locating estate records which may not yet be found on the NRA indexes.

As will be apparent, the HMC’s ‘Religious Houses Project’ is in its very early stages and the index coverage cannot hope to be comprehensive yet. However, I hope that colleagues will not hesitate to contact me if they identify any serious gaps or errors. I would also be most grateful to learn of any surveys (either general or particular) which have been, or are being, undertaken and have not been recorded in the Monastic Research Bulletin. We are always very pleased to receive copies of such surveys, published or not, which (with the compilers’ permission) we can then make more widely available to our researchers.

1997 INTERNATIONAL MEDIEVAL CONGRESS, UNIVERSITY OF LEEDS

The Monastic Research Bulletin sponsored three sessions at the International Medieval Congress held at the University of Leeds in July 1997 under the title 'Men and Women Religious in Medieval and Early Modern Society'. The nine papers were well received and negotiations are in progress for their publication. Plans are also underway to continue this, or a similar, theme under MRB sponsorship at the 1998 Congress.

A BIOGRAPHICAL REGISTER OF THE ENGLISH CATHEDRAL PRIORIES OF THE PROVINCE OF CANTERBURY

Now that the Biographical Register of the English Cathedral Priories of the Province of Canterbury [BRECP] is available in print I have a request to make of those who make use of it. If any additional information comes to light or any corrections to an entry need to be made, I shall be most grateful if they could be passed to me as I have already begun a supplementary file for future publication.

My current project is to complete my 'Comparative Study of the English Cathedral Priories'. It will focus on the period between the late thirteenth and the early fifteenth centuries (c. 1280 - c. 1415) and will include Durham priory, which is not treated in BRECP.

PLYMPTON PRIORY AND ITS PATRONS AND BENEFACTORS c. 1121-1400

The subject of my doctoral dissertation developed from my interest in the English Augustinian canons. Several aspects of the history of this order have attracted my attention: the identities of the patrons and benefactors of Augustinian houses, episcopal involvement in the foundation of Augustinian houses, and the extent to which the canons were active in the cure of souls. My dissertation will investigate these issues through a study of the history of an Augustinian priory that was located just outside modern-day Plymouth in the town of Plympton St Mary, Devon.

Plympton priory was founded by Bishop William Warehast of Exeter in 1121 as an Augustinian house; it had previously been a college of secular canons that is known to have existed by the tenth century. Plympton was one of the Augustinian order’s success stories in England, at least in terms of material wealth. It became one of the richest monastic houses in the West of England, and essentially controlled the monastic borough of Sutton (now Plymouth). My dissertation concentrates on the extent of the Bishops’ and the benefactors’ involvement in helping the priory achieve such prosperity. I am especially interested in the motives of the patrons and benefactors for giving gifts to the priory and their conceptions of the duties of the Augustinian canons. Later disputes between Plympton priory and the heirs of its benefactors reveal the tenacity of the canons in defending their rights.

The priory's success at obtaining spiritualia is particularly striking. An investigation of the manner of acquiring churches, pensions and advowsons as well as an examination of the records of institutions to benefices will shed light on the involvement of the canons in the cure of souls in certain parishes of Devon and Cornwall. As well, Plympton priory provides an interesting case study of the value placed on the patronage of monastic houses: in the fourteenth century there was a lengthy legal struggle between the Crown and the Bishops of Exeter as to who was the rightful patron of the priory.

The sources for my dissertation include a variety of published and unpublished charters, as well as government records and court documents. Information derived from the registers of the Bishops of Exeter has also been central to this work.

The dissertation will be submitted by March 1998. I would certainly be interested in making contact with others who are interested in the history of the Augustinian canons.

ROTHA CLAY’S HERMITS AND ANCHORITES OF ENGLAND

Rotha Mary Clay’s Hermits and Anchorites of England, published by Methuen in the Antiquary’s Books series in 1914, is still the only systematic attempt to describe the solitary life in medieval England. With its delicate balance of a highly readable, occasionally whimsical, text and a formidably learned appendix, her book fulfilled perfectly the aspiration of volumes in the series: ‘to be comprehensive and popular, as well as accurate and scholarly; so that they may be of service to the general reader, and at the same time helpful and trustworthy books of reference to the antiquary or student'. More than eighty years later, Hermits and Anchorites (though scarce) still answers this description remarkably well.

Clay was, however, aware from the first that the tabulated list of sites which she presented as an appendix, and formed the data on which the text was based, would be incomplete. Over the years following the publication of Hermits and Anchorites she continued to collect materials for a revised edition, both by her own research and through many references communicated by the book's readers. As more solitaries came to light, so she recognized the need to alter and supplement the text herself. Her career in social work never permitted her to dedicate herself to the work full-time, however, and she published only two articles based on the new material before her death in 1961 (‘Further Studies on Medieval Recluses’, Journal of the British Archaeological Association, 3rd ser., 16 (1953), 74-86; ‘Some Northern Anchorites’, Archaeologia Aeliana, 4th ser., 33 (1955), 202-17). Thereafter the revision of the book was taken on by Basil Cottle of the University of Bristol. Although he did a lot of work sorting and collating Clay's notes for the list of sites, and had written the greater part of a revised text, nothing appeared in print, and the project seems to have lapsed some years before his death in 1994.

Responsibility for completing the revised edition of Hermits and Anchorites has now devolved on me. My chief concern at present is to update the Clay-Cottle lists of solitaries by county, as the basis for a thoroughly rethought and revised text. I hope that some of the more interesting county lists may appear in advance in the publication of the relevant local history societies.

Miss Clay benefited enormously from the generosity of her fellow scholars in communicating any references to hermits or anchorites they happened upon. Although only tangentially related to monastic studies (neither hermits nor anchorites were ipso facto members of a religious order), solitaries occur with some frequency in cartularies, dissolution papers, episcopal registers and other staples of the monastic historian. I should be most grateful for any references readers encounter to a hermit (heremita) or anchorite (anachoreta, anc(o)rist,

THE PREMONSTRATENSIAN CANONS IN LATER MEDIEVAL ENGLAND

The aim of my Ph.D. thesis is to study the history of the White canons of England, the Premonstratensians, in the later middle ages. This will be mainly undertaken by a critical examination of the Premonstratensian visitation records in the Bodleian Library, in order to evaluate the extent to which they were faithful to the tenets of their religious observance. The nature of these visitation documents and the actual process of visitation will also be analysed. The thesis will also include, amongst other research topics, a study of the surviving library lists, books and manuscripts from England’s thirty Premonstratensian abbeys, with a view to ascertaining the canons’ liturgical observances, spirituality, the desire for learning and whether or not they sought to provide good pastoral care to those parish churches which were appropriated and served by them; or merely exploited these as a source of financial income. I hope that this study will be a contribution towards a greater knowledge of the condition of the religious orders in the late middle ages and will lead to a clearer understanding of the Premonstratensians, whose history in this period has been largely neglected since H.M. Colvin’s The White Canons in England (1951).

SHARP

Dr Moffat writes to give details of SHARP, the acronym for Soutra Hospital Archaeoethnopharmacological Research Project, soon to be re-constituted as a registered charity named Soutra Archaeo-medicine. Research is now in its seventh year. The unique thrust of the multidisciplinary investigation is archaeo-medical and centres on the close study of the physical waste of medical practice that has accumulated on and around this hospital site. The House of the Holy Trinity at Soutra is situated 17 miles south-east of Edinburgh on the medieval Via Regia to England. It stands at 1200 ft. alt. - making it the highest hospital and monastery in Britain. The hospital followed the Augustinian rule and the canons were known collectively as ‘the master and brethren’. The circumstances of its foundation are unknown, and the earliest extant charter is dated 1164; the latest patient traced was in 1650. The hospital has been comprehensively demolished down to around ground-level. This optimises access to the waste-disposal system of drains, ditches and pits - where the ‘medical waste’ has come to lie. Publications are available from SHARP.

THE ROLE OF THE FRIARS IN THE CRUSADES AND THE CRUSADER STATES

M.Phil/Ph.D
Supervised by Dr Jonathan Phillips
Royal Holloway College, University of London

Work on this part-time thesis started autumn 1996. The aim is to look at the involvement of the friars - principally the Dominicans and Franciscans, but also to some extent the Carmelites - in the Levant in the period of the crusades: the establishment of their provinces and their missions, their use as envoys on diplomatic missions and as intermediaries in relations between the Papacy and the Greek Orthodox Church and between the Papacy and the Eastern Churches, their contribution to the literature of the reunion debate, their administrative role in the newly created states, in the episcopate and as apostolic legates, and the reports and itineraria they left behind them.

It would be interesting to know to what extent the English mendicant houses were caught up in the enthusiasm for Terra Sancta and how many English friars made the journey to Outremer, like Haymon of Faversham and Rudolph of Rheims (English in spite of his name) who were two Franciscans sent as envoys by Gregory IX to Germanos II in 1234 with two Dominicans to take part in talks at Nicaea on the vexed questions of the use of unleavened bread ad the filioque insertion in the Creed.

THE BEAUCHIEF ABBEY CARTULARY

An edition of the fifteenth-century cartulary of the Premonstratensian abbey founded at Beauchief (now a suburb of Sheffield) by 1183 is being prepared for publication by the Derbyshire Record Society. A grant from the Humanities Research Board of the British Academy has enabled Lisa Howarth to transcribe the cartulary and write headings. David Hey of the University of Sheffield is writing an introduction and editorial notes. The cartulary contains 224 charters relating to lands in Derbyshire, Nottinghamshire, Leicestershire and South Yorkshire. Meanwhile, the Department of Archaeology at the University of Sheffield is surveying and partly excavating the site.

THE ARCHAEOLOGY OF LATER MONASTIC HOSPITALITY

Thesis supervised by Dr Lawrence Butler and Jane Grenville

An area of the monastic site which has thus far received little critical attention has included those buildings designed and built for use by visitors, such as gatehouses, guest-houses and superiors’ lodgings. These buildings structured and were structured by the activity of the people who used them in the form of ‘ritualized’ hospitality. This thesis is concerned not only with the form and function of these buildings, but with the recursive relationships between material culture and society, between monastic and secular cultures, and between individuals negotiating power through their manipulation and structuring of space.

In carrying out this study, I am looking at several arrangements of standing buildings on monastic sites in the midlands as case studies, including the little-examined Cistercian house, Stoneleigh abbey. Using techniques of building recording including TST survey and computer rectified photography (AUTOCAD), I am attempting to understand the later development of these buildings, and in conjunction with textual, pictorial and landscape evidence, to understand what hospitality was, the ways in which it was expressed and how it was experienced by both inhabitants and visitors.
