

TRANSFORMATIVE JUSTICE: GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Worldwide Universities Network International Conference

12-13 May 2011, Liberty Building LT (LG.06), University of Leeds

This international network, led by the Centre for Global Development at the University of Leeds, Centre for Applied Human Rights at the University of York and Sheffield International Development Network at the University of Sheffield, brings together an international team of scholars interested in developing a new research agenda on 'transformative justice after mass violence and the role of non-governmental actors'.

Over the past 20 years, there has been a remarkable proliferation of 'transitional justice' mechanisms (primarily, criminal tribunals and truth commissions) that have promised accountability for perpetrators and redress for victims of political violence and human rights abuses. Yet the impact of such mechanisms has often been disappointing. Therefore this conference invites a range of international experts to contribute to a new research agenda that offers a concept of justice that is more 'transformative' than 'transitional', one that seeks to change pre-conflict structures in ways that are more inclusive, less unequal and more fair.
