

THURSDAY, 14 February

| 12:30-14:00 | Library meeting room |

Dr Sophie Harman

Queen Mary, University of London

Leadership in global health governance

The last two decades have witnessed radical changes in the international institutional architecture of health governance. Given the plethora of global health institutions, and the problem of overlapping mandates and competition for resources, the exercise of effective global health leadership is more vital than ever.

In this talk Dr Harman reflects on the role of leadership in global health history, drawing on a recent Wellcome Trust-sponsored workshop at Queen Mary, University of London, and offers different means of thinking about leadership and the implication of such meaning for the future of global health governance. A panel of WHO experts will respond with additional perspectives.

For more information, please contact: GHHistories@who.int