Overview of Statistical Analysis of Plasma Turbulence Data

Sadruddin Benkadda

Aix Marseille University, PIIM Laboratory, UMR 7345 CNRS

Campus Saint Jérôme, 13397 Marseille Cedex 20

France

Understanding nonlinear phenomena underlying plasma turbulence has always been intimately related to our capacity of interpreting observational data. This review lists some of these nonlinear phenomena and then presents appropriate data analysis techniques. These statistical tools are applied to various topics such as intermittency, self-organization and coherent structures and passive scalar transport.