Finding graduate job vacancies

Two key things before you start
1. Make sure you are clear about what sort of work you want to do so you can make a strong application and perform well in interviews. We have a wealth of resources and support to help you – check them out www.york.ac.uk/careers

2. Know how to make a strong application: Check out this section of our website www.york.ac.uk/careers/applications and then book a careers appointment to get advice and feedback.

How and when do employers recruit?

1. Graduate Schemes – advance recruitment
Many larger employers (often in accountancy/finance/IT/consultancy/management/retail etc.) run an annual cycle of recruitment during which they select large numbers of graduates onto graduate training schemes. These types of employers are often very visible on campus – hosting events, attending careers fairs etc. so they can let as many students as possible know about the opportunities they offer.

Schemes are often (not always) open to graduates of any degree discipline and they usually last from 1 – 3 years. Graduates are employed and paid by the employer and there is usually a permanent position at the end of the scheme.

Some employers start advertising as early as the summer just before you enter your final year, with closing dates for some popular schemes in the autumn of your final year. But don’t worry, many schemes are open for longer and some may re-open later in the academic year if more places are available or remain unfilled.

There is usually a long and structured recruitment process which can include:
- an online application form,
- psychometric/aptitude testing,
- assessment centre
- interviews (Skype, telephone and/or face-to-face)

We can help you prepare for all these parts of the process.

Start dates are usually the summer following graduation. Taught postgraduate students can apply but they should check out start dates – some companies have more than one annual intake per year or you may want to think about doing something short term before joining the following year’s annual intake. Discuss your options with us.

Although there is a lot of competition for places some employers report recruitment shortfalls due to a shortage of applicants with the right skills. Others have highlighted the poor standard of applications – you MUST learn how to do this properly. Sometimes companies will extend or reopen their recruitment period to attract more applicants, but others may close recruitment early when they get enough applications – do your research and be prepared to apply early.

In addition to the annual recruitment cycle, many of these employers will also recruit “just in time” to fill specific graduate positions immediately.

2. Immediate Vacancies – direct entry
Near to graduation you can apply for direct entry jobs that are available immediately (or in the very near future) – these do not form part of a graduate recruitment scheme and can be with an employer of any
The employer would expect you to be available to start work reasonably soon after the recruitment process, so you should not apply for this type of position too far in advance. Around Easter of final year is a good time to start – but you can do lots of research and preparation before this.

Smaller companies (often referred to as SMEs – small and medium sized enterprises) generally recruit in this way and despite appearances in reality most graduates (up to 85%) actually work for these smaller companies, charities and in the public sector. These companies will include organisations in popular sectors such as heritage, PR and marketing, media, IT, environment. Some organisations in this sector may run a graduate scheme but this may be much less high profile and involve smaller numbers. You can find out more about how small businesses make up 99% of all businesses in the UK here www.fsb.org.uk/media-centre/small-business-statistics

Read more below about how to find vacancies in these organisations and check out our Job Sector pages for links and specific vacancy sources: www.york.ac.uk/careers/sectors

2. Job Search Engines – speed up your job search!

   - www.indeed.co.uk, www.jobbydoo.co.uk and www.careerjet.co.uk are examples of job search engines which search thousands of other job sites to find opportunities that match your search criteria.

   For advice on finding jobs in particular sectors, see the relevant Considering… series information sheet www.york.ac.uk/careers/infosheets or information on our job sector page at www.york.ac.uk/careers/sectors
Be careful about what personal information you post to online job boards. Never include details like your date of birth, address, or National Insurance Number – this could make you susceptible to identity theft. Use www.safer-jobs.com/advice.cfm for advice on how to spot job scams. Come and talk to us if you have any concerns.

2. SMEs and Immediate vacancies:
Smaller organisations tend to advertise specific jobs on an individual basis as a business need arises, and, outside of their formal graduate schemes, larger employers do the same. It is likely that final year undergraduate students will be able to apply for these “immediate” vacancies in the summer term and taught postgraduates during the summer period before the end of their course.

Vacancy sources – start with all the general websites listed above, plus individual company websites, via recruitment agencies, professional journals, trade press, online job boards, local/regional and national press. Many employers will also advertise through Universal Jobmatch (www.gov.uk/jobsearch)

Search UK national and regional newspapers using www.wrx.zen.co.uk/britnews.htm or www.thepaperboy.com/uk/.

Professional Bodies for your sector
Professional and supporting bodies may also be a source of job information and advice – www.totalprofessions.com/profession-finder and www.york.ac.uk/careers/sectors. There is a range of professional or specialist journals which carry job vacancies in Careers, eg New Scientist, Campaign, Bookseller, PR Week, Third Sector and many more.

Recruitment fairs/ Employer events on campus can give you the opportunity to find out about vacancies and talk directly to employers. We hold three major graduate recruitment fairs each autumn term, and a wide range of graduate employers visit York each term to talk with current student about their opportunities, or deliver presentations. Check out www.york.ac.uk/careers/events

See Making the most of Careers and Recruitment Fairs at www.york.ac.uk/careers/infosheets in the Job Hunting section, for advice.

Knowledge Transfer Partnership (KTP)
KTP is one of the largest graduate recruitment programmes in the UK. A KTP is paid project based work in a business that allows you to apply your learning from your degree, start a real paid job straight away and gain further qualifications. KTP works across a wide range of academic disciplines and industry sectors. Positions can be from 6 months – 3 years. Find out more, register your interest, and browse vacancies at http://info.ktponline.org.uk/action/search/partnership_vac.aspx

Recruitment agencies
Recruitment agencies can be another important source of vacancies – especially if you have some relevant experience or skills. Use www.rec.uk.com to locate agencies by location and specialism. www.agencycentral.co.uk is a directory of recruitment agencies and job sites. Temping through an agency can be a great way to develop new skills and get more experience. It also gives you a great chance to make contacts that may be useful sources of future opportunities. See Using Recruitment Agencies at www.york.ac.uk/careers/infosheets under the Job Hunting tab for more advice.

Local and regional vacancies
Many of the sites listed earlier on this information sheet will advertise vacancies throughout the UK so you can search for the geographical area you want. Job search engines like indeed.co.uk make this much easier too.

Specific regional job websites for Yorkshire include:
- www.yorkshiregraduates.co.uk Graduate jobs and internships in the Yorkshire region
- www.yorkpress.co.uk/jobs/
- www.yorkshirepost.co.uk/jobs
- www.northyorks.gov.uk search for ‘Jobs & Careers’, then select ‘Apprenticeships, graduates and work experience’, then ‘Graduates’. Apply for the Graduate Talent Pool to be considered for vacancies specifically aimed at helping graduates
- Use www.prospects.ac.uk/graduate_job_search.htm and search the vacancies by location
- Use www.agcas.org.uk/agcas_resources/146-Regional-graduate-job-websites to find regional graduate vacancy websites throughout the UK

Unadvertised opportunities – the “hidden” job market
It is important to realise that not all vacancies are advertised formally – many opportunities are found through networking, personal contacts, speculative applications, etc. The more you understand about how this “hidden job market” works, the more you can take advantage of it.

Networking can be an important factor in accessing these jobs – there is useful information at www.prospects.ac.uk/job_hunting.htm and on our information sheet Successful Networking (download from www.york.ac.uk/careers/infosheets).

Approaching employers speculatively can have advantages – you can target SME employers who may not be deliberately seeking a graduate and if you do your research you can often identify the decision-maker directly and target them. While SMEs may not have the structured training programmes offered by bigger companies, they can often offer a breadth of experience and accelerated responsibility. You may also be better able to negotiate your salary and career development once you’ve gained experience. Send your CV and a covering letter, which should be persuasive, relevant and positive about your skills and show your adaptability. See the information sheet How to write a CV and Covering letter and the CV Guide on the VLE. You can have your CV and covering letter for a speculative approach to an employer reviewed in Careers.

Need work experience? Graduate Internships
Most employers want to see evidence of work experience and skills alongside your degree when you are applying for jobs. If you need to get work experience once you graduate to boost your CV or to gain some specific experience in a sector you want to work in, you could try to get a graduate internship. Many of the general graduate vacancy sites listed above will advertise internships suitable for graduates. You could also try:
- The Graduate Talent Pool http://graduatetalentpool.direct.gov.uk
- Inspiring Interns www.inspiringinterns.com
- Yorkshire Graduates www.yorkshiregraduates.co.uk/
- Step www.step.org.uk paid graduate internships
- North Yorkshire County Council www.northyorks.gov.uk/article/23271/Graduates offers paid internships (up to 12 weeks).

We have a range of information sheets covering how to find work experience in many different sectors at www.york.ac.uk/careers/infosheets. Graduate internships are sometimes available through our Student Internship Bureau (SIB) (www.york.ac.uk/careers/sib).

Doing voluntary work is another way to gain work experience. During your time at York you will have many opportunities to volunteer www.york.ac.uk/careers/volunteering. Once you’ve graduated use www.do-it.org – a database of thousands of national and international volunteering opportunities available both during and after university.

Overseas opportunities
For overseas work please see Working outside the UK at www.york.ac.uk/careers/infosheets under the Job Hunting tab and visit our World Links web pages for links to vacancy sources and country information at www.york.ac.uk/careers/worldlinks. The Going Global database (accessible via the International Work web page) offers regularly updated country specific career and employment information resources with worldwide job and internship vacancies, company profiles, application and interview advice, industry and employment trends and much more. You will need a York log in to access this resource.

International Students
Please see www.york.ac.uk/careers/international for information about the specific issues you should consider if you are planning to remain in the UK after graduation – including information on visa options, plus an information Toolkit on the Tier 5 visa. This section also includes information for those planning to return home.

Strategies for graduates
There is a lot of competition for graduate jobs – although this varies in different sectors. The big graduate schemes usually attract many more applications than there are jobs and this is what tends to grab the headlines – but smaller employers often find they don’t get enough good quality applications or applicants don’t have the right skills.

If the sector you are targeting is particularly competitive be prepared to consider taking a temporary or part time position or one at a slightly lower level – remember it is a chance to show them what you can do! Many large employers will ring fence jobs for internal applicants.

Finally... Get out there and find what you want - get involved, talk to people, keep positive, use work experience or voluntary work contacts or make new contacts, build up networks of people who can give you advice and information, as well as tell you about vacancies. Pick up graduate directories from Careers. Check out the vacancy websites and download all the information sheets relevant to your job search - www.york.ac.uk/careers/infosheets.
