Dr Janaka Jayawickrama – Programme Leader

Janaka received his PhD in Social Anthropology and an MSc in Disaster Management and Sustainable Development from Northumbria University. Janaka also holds a Postgraduate Certificate in Counselling and Psychotherapy from the All India Institute for Counselling, Psychotherapy and Human Relationships in Vellore and a Diploma in Trauma Treatment from the International Trauma Treatment Program in the USA. He is currently an affiliate scholar of the Center for World Indigenous Studies (CWIS) in the USA and acts as a reviewer for the Medical Research Council in the UK as well as for journals such as Social Science and Medicine and Third World Quarterly. Janaka is a Visiting Lecture to the Institute of Health and Society at Newcastle University where he specialises in mental health and politics in humanitarian assistance.

Dr Jo Rose – Deputy Programme Leader

Jo completed her doctorate in Humanitarian Assistance at the University of Northumbria at Newcastle in 2013. Her thesis examined the delivery of humanitarian aid to Somalia and in particular the implementation of education, shelter, water, hygiene and sanitation. Jo has worked intensively in Complex Political Emergencies including Liberia, Somalia and Sudan. Throughout her career Jo has worked within and between academia and policy and practice in disasters, conflicts and uneven development. Jo has taught graduate courses on humanitarian assistance, research methods, project management, needs assessments, monitoring and evaluation and sustainable development. Her ongoing work on community involvement in the delivery of humanitarian aid seeks to shape future practice and policy on humanitarian interventions in disasters and conflicts.
