Abstract:
We describe an expressive visual programming language for defining behaviors manifested by reified actors in a 2D virtual world that can be compiled into programs comprised of sequences of combinators that are themselves reified as actors. This permits programs to build programs from a small fixed set of components delivered by diffusion using processes that resemble chemistry as much as computation.